Prêmio Nobel de Literatura 2017

Kathy H. tem 31 anos e está prestes a encerrar sua carreira de "cuidadora". Enquanto isso, ela relembra o tempo que passou em Hailsham, um internato inglês que dá grande ênfase às atividades artísticas e conta, entre várias outras amenidades, com bosques, um lago povoado de marrecos, uma horta e gramados impecavelmente aparados. No entanto, esse internato idílico esconde uma terrível verdade: todos os "alunos" de Hailsham são clones, produzidos com a única finalidade de servir de peças de reposição. Assim que atingirem a idade adulta, e depois de cumprido um período como cuidadores, todos terão o mesmo destino - doar seus órgãos até "concluir". Embora à primeira vista pareça pertencer ao terreno da ficção científica, o livro de Ishiguro lança mão desses "doadores", em tudo e por tudo idênticos a nós, para falar da existência. Pela voz ingênua e contida de Kathy, somos conduzidos até o terreno pantanoso da solidão e da desilusão onde, vez por outra, nos sentimos prestes a atolar. Finalista do Man Booker Prize 2005.
